“After studying with some well meaning teachers who sometimes taught me to paint inside of the box and outside of myself, I have gone on to pursue the journey toward freedom of expression. (I give thanks to those teachers who gave me permission to do so!) The rules have no longer become obstacles to creativity, but rather tools to be used selectively and with skill to enhance it.

In essence, my paintings are like fine reductions. My intentions are two fold: to communicate how I feel about what I see, using the elements of design and color to achieve that. And, to glorify the Giver of the gift through the work of my hands. In the end, it ALL boils down to a process of intention.
